FINAL REPORT

This is the final, comprehensive report on the three years of Temple University James E. Beasley School of Law's rule of law project in the People's Republic of China. We are very pleased to report that we have met all of the goals described in our proposals within the grant period.

We are extremely grateful to the U.S. Government for its support of this groundbreaking program that is making a tangible and significant contribution to the ongoing process of development of the legal system in China. We are particularly grateful to Senator Arlen Specter, who understood the potential for this project immediately, and to Vicki Siegal and other members of Senator Specter's staff. We also gratefully acknowledge Assistant Secretaries of State James A. Kelly and Lorne Craner, as well as Deputy Assistant Secretary of State Marc Kohler. Paul Grove of the U.S. Senate Foreign Operations Committee provided us with wise counsel. The team at USAID, especially Carey Gordon, Christine Wegman, and Leon Waskin, generously provided crucial hands-on guidance and welcome assistance throughout the project.

I. SUMMARY

In 1999, at the request of the Chinese government, Temple established a Master of Laws program in Beijing, China, to educate well-placed Chinese judges, prosecutors, government officials, law professors, and lawyers in U.S. and international legal principles. This program, which currently operates in partnership with Tsinghua University School of Law, is the first foreign law degree granting program approved by the Chinese Ministry of Education.

Several other Temple initiatives contribute to the overall development of the rule of law in China. Temple offers non-degree legal education for judges and prosecutors in cooperation with the National Judicial Training College of the Supreme Court of China, the Supreme People's Procuratorate, the State Administration of Foreign Expert Affairs, New York University School of Law, and Brigham Young University.

In addition to these non-degree legal education programs, Temple provides technical assistance to China's legislative drafting committees creating China's Property Code and Tort Law. Temple also supports scholarly research and curriculum development for Chinese law schools in critical areas of law that are rapidly developing or in need of development. Temple's Institute for International Law and Public Policy has hosted month-long roundtables on WTO Compliance, Law of the Internet, Environmental Law and Policy, and AIDS and Health Care Regulation.

II. REPORTS ON INDIVIDUAL GOALS

The three annual proposals made during the granting period of the cooperative agreement laid out five specific goals outlining Temple's objective of promoting the rule of law in China. This report will summarize the specific accomplishments of Temple's rule of law programs over the past three years under each of these goals.

GOAL I: Scholarships

Providing scholarships for judges, government officials, law professors, and ethnic minority lawyers to attend Temple's legal education programs.

Temple's goal is to educate a core group of well-placed Chinese judges, prosecutors, government officials, law professors, and lawyers who will be influential in shaping the rapidly-developing Chinese legal system by providing educational programs on U.S. and international law. In furtherance of this objective, we have offered legal education in various formats during the three-year grant period. Temple created the first foreign law degree-granting program in China in the form of a 15-month Master of Laws (LL.M.) program which operates in cooperation with Tsinghua University. In addition, we offer four-month legal education programs for judges in cooperation with the National Judicial College of the Supreme People's Court; a four-month legal education program for prosecutors in cooperation with the Supreme People's Procuratorate; as well as numerous conferences, short-term think tanks, and lectures. The specific details and accomplishments of each of these programs are described in this report.

We are pleased to report that we have accomplished our goals and exceeded our expectations. A total of 411 Chinese legal professionals have participated in at least one of Temple's educational programs during the past three years, including 150 judges from throughout China.<sup>1</sup> A total of 327 participants (80%) are in the public sector, where they report that they are drawing on their Temple legal education as they write judicial decisions, bring more transparency and order to criminal prosecutions, and draft laws for the National People's Congress. Law professors report that they teach their classes and infuse their legal scholarship with examples from U.S. law.

Education is a long term investment in the legal infrastructure of a society. The evidence is clear, however, that even in the short time that Temple has been providing legal education in China, our graduates are using their education effectively to support the development of the rule of law in China from within the system. As these future leaders advance in their careers, their opportunities to use their legal education will only increase.

Please see Exhibit 1 for a listing of all participants sorted by Temple program. In brief, Table 1 on the next page lists the numbers of participants in each of Temple's 28 programs:<sup>2</sup>

Geographic Distribution of All Temple Program Participants

The U.S. Consular Districts each include the following provinces:

North	Beijing, Gansu, Hebei, Henan, Hubei, Hunan, Inner Mongolia, Jiangxi, Ningxia, Qinghai, Shandong, Shanxi, Shaanxi, Tianjin, Xinjiang
Northeast	Heilongjiang, Jilin, Liaoning
East	Jiangsu, Shanghai, Zhejiang
Southeast	Fujian, Guangdong, Guangxi, Hainan
Southwest	Chongqing, Guizhou, Sichuan, Tibet, Yunnan

A. The Master of Laws Degree Program

The Masters of Laws degree program Temple operates cooperatively with Tsinghua University is the most comprehensive educational program Temple offers in China. This 15-month degree program opened in 1999 at China University of Political Science and Law and relocated to Tsinghua University in 2001. The fourth graduating class celebrated its commencement on October 31, 2004.<sup>3</sup>

A total of 205 Chinese legal professionals, including judges, National People's Congress legal advisors, prosecutors, government officials, and law professors have graduated from or are currently enrolled in Temple's Beijing and Philadelphia LL.M. programs. Of these, 126 (61.5%) are from the public sector. Twenty-six (12.7%) are minority lawyers from traditionally disadvantaged groups within China.

Chart 3 below displays the amount of government officials educated in the Temple LL.M. programs:

Public Sector LLM Graduates and Current Students

<sup>3</sup> As part of our ongoing reporting, we provide photocopies of course evaluations in our quarterly reports. Exhibit 9 to this report contains course evaluations for the March- April 2003 courses in Constitutional Law, Evidence, and Intellectual Property.

Chart 4 displays the comparison of public and private sector graduates and current students of our LL.M. programs. At least three of the lawyers in the private sector have indicated that they have robust criminal defense practices.

Public vs. Private Sector in LL.M. Programs

The Chinese State Degree Office of the People's Republic of China evaluated the Temple LL.M. program and re-approved it in March, 2003 for at least three years, an usually long period. The program evaluators (a law school dean and two associate deans) praised the high quality of the curriculum, faculty, and student body, and stated in their conclusion:

"It is evident that [the Temple/Tsinghua LL.M.] program has had clear accomplishments. The program has played an active role in promoting Sino-U.S. legal exchange, advancing the quality of our legal professionals, helping meet the needs of China after China's joining the WTO, and promoting the development of the rule of law. Therefore, it is recommended that the program be continued on a further improving basis and be undertaken better and better."<sup>4</sup>

<sup>4</sup> The report, which was issued by State Council Degree Office of the People's Republic of China: Approval Notice: Tsinghua University and Temple University Joint Master of Law Program, identified as Tsinghua University Document No. 21 (2003) stated:

"The program has received great attention and support from the leaderships of both universities. The program is equipped with adequate and high standard classrooms, Internet networks so that all major courses could be taught through multi-media devices. Both Tsinghua and Temple law schools have well-established libraries, and the program faculty possesses very rich teaching experiences.

"All professors teaching in the program are very responsible and the level of their academic teaching is high. The program faculty members who are selected from legal practices are professionally strong. The program has maintained a high standard of admissions. The admission examination and selection are highly selective and the quality of the students enrolled is high. The program has a very sound and orderly management system and any student who fails to meet academic requirements would be dropped.

The LL.M. curriculum provides an in-depth education on the basic principles of U.S. and international law. All courses are taught in English, using U.S. casebooks which include U.S. Supreme Court decisions. The curriculum, which originally emphasized the basic first-year U.S. law curriculum including U.S. constitutional law and business law offerings, has steadily incorporated more courses which emphasize the recognition and protection of individual rights, such as criminal procedure and international protection of human rights. Approximately 40% of the courses offered in the 2004-5 academic year emphasize the protection of individual rights from arbitrary government action. In the 2003-4 academic year Temple began offering a concentration in Criminal Law and Procedure, which was selected by approximately 25% of the class.

In addition to the curriculum in Beijing, each LL.M. class spends one eight-week summer session at Temple's Philadelphia campus where they take American Criminal Procedure and Advocacy. In this course they use their newly learned skills to conduct an American-style criminal mock trial where they make opening and closing arguments to the judge and jury, examine witnesses through cross examination, and apply evidentiary rules—all in English. As part of this curriculum they also visit the U.S. Attorney's Office, the Philadelphia District Attorney's Office and observe actual federal and state trials. Judges and prosecutors in Philadelphia have taken an active interest in Temple's China program, and they cooperate fully by interacting with and providing extensive access to our students.

A critical part of the summer program in Philadelphia is teaching students to use the Internet for legal research so that they can remain in touch with international legal developments throughout their legal careers. The Legal Research and Writing course is taught using on-line English language legal research databases. Students learn about free Internet legal databases, and are encouraged to visit the public affairs sections of the U.S. Embassy and consulates in China to take advantage of the legal research resources available there.

As part of our ongoing monitoring of our program, we regularly invite our graduates to tell us how they are using their education in their work. Below we have selected three anecdotal stories to provide actual illustrations of how our graduates are using the skills they acquired from their Temple education to advance the rule of law in China.

"The program curriculum is reasonably arranged and the courses offered are of varieties. The program curriculum and teaching have a clear goal and the books used are all original and the latest editions. Each course has a syllabus and is conducted through a case-study method exceeding 30 cases per course. The program approval rate by the students is high. Compared with other similar programs in the country, this program clearly has its own distinction in curriculum, teaching methods as well as selection of books.

"It is evident that this program has had clear accomplishments. The program has played an active role in promoting Sino-US legal exchange, advancing the quality of our legal professionals, helping meet the needs of China after China's joining the WTO, and promoting the development of the rule of law. Therefore, it is recommended that the program be continued on a further improving basis and be undertaken better and better."

Ms. Hou Xiaoyan, a prosecutor employed by the Research Division of the Haidian District Prosecutor's Office, won a graduation prize for her outstanding paper on the developing right to counsel in China, relying extensively on U.S. criminal procedural law. Her legal articles have been published in Chinese legal newspapers and law journals, including Legal Daily, Procuratorial Daily, Chinese Youth Daily, Chinese Lawyer, and People's Procuratorate. Three articles are collected in books where the chief editors are prominent Chinese law professors. In April 2003, she conducted a survey on the existing exercise of the right to counsel in some 200 detainees in a detention house in Beijing. This survey report won the first award of the Excellent Survey and Research Works Competition held in the Municipal Procuratorate of Beijing in December 2003. The full text of this report was serialized in the leading Chinese legal newspaper, Legal Daily, in eight issues from early February to March 2004. In the end of 2003, she also published an English-language article in Hong Kong Law Journal where noteworthy American law professors Jerome A. Cohen and Stanley Lubman serve as overseas legal experts. Based on the knowledge obtained from this program, she plans to explore further the existing problems in the legislation and enforcement of Chinese criminal law and criminal procedure, raise suggestions, and thereby make her own contribution to China's legal reforms.

Professor Sha Lijin of China University of Political Science and Law, was inspired by her LL.M. degree to write two Legal English textbooks in cooperation with two other legal English professors from her institution. These texts, which draw extensively on U.S. legal sources she encountered during the LL.M. program, are widely used in many Chinese Law Schools. Recently, she and her fellow Temple LL.M. graduates have been translating American legal texts into Chinese. They have translated many titles into English, including Robert Gorman's classic text on U.S. Labor Law and Kefauver Criminal Law and Procedure, making U.S. law accessible to even more Chinese legal experts. Finally, after completing the LL.M. program, Sha Lijin entered a Ph.D. program to become a legal expert in Criminal Law. She spent the fall semester of 2003 doing additional research for her Ph.D. at Temple's main campus. She is writing a book on her research and will teach Criminal Procedure at China University of Political Science and Law. Eleven law professors have graduated from Temple's LL.M. program, including Professor Ye Chuanxing who teaches Human Rights Law at Renmin University of China School of Law.

Mr. Shi Hong is a staff drafter for the National People's Congress. He is currently working on the revision of China's property law. Mr. Shi has indicated that his Temple education provided him with a profound sense of substantive knowledge and administrative procedure. He not only learned a lot about U.S. property law, but also improved his English and is now able to conduct additional research on U.S. Law. Moreover, the Temple-organized field trip to Washington, D.C. gave him a birds-eye view of the legislative process in action and provided him an opportunity to interact with high-ranking U.S. government officials. He said he has taken these lessons back to China to share with his colleagues and to instill a greater sense of order and transparency into the Chinese legislative process. Other NPC staff officials who have graduated from the Temple LL.M. programs, including Messrs. Li Shouwei, Liu Haitao, Wang Hong, and Zhu Hongbin, have all indicated similar sentiments.

Of the Beijing LL.M. graduates, 53 are lawyers from the private sector. Many have reported back to us that their Temple education has assisted them in bringing their legal practices to a higher level.

For example, Mr. Chu Yuansheng now works for China Hewlett-Packard Co. Ltd., and he indicated that Temple has assisted him in understanding the U.S. business culture and has made him more able to promote Hewlett-Packard's business interests in China. He cited an example from his job in which a government official demanded a bribe in order to permit the company to receive a shipment of goods. Rather than supply the bribe, as the then prevailing wisdom may have been, Mr. Chu took the knowledge of administrative law he gained from his Temple education and challenged the officer through legal channels. Hewlett-Packard prevailed in the dispute, and Mr. Chu credits Temple for giving him the strong awareness of administrative procedure to pursue such a claim, even though under Chinese and not U.S. law.

Our graduates are enthusiastic about their Temple education and have formed three regional alumnae associations and published comprehensive alumnae directories in each of the last two years. The Temple Law Alumni association in China will be an excellent vehicle for supporting the graduates in their continued professional development as members of the international legal community, as well as a way to recruit the best possible students for future classes. Temple maintains an active database of all of our program alumni to keep in contact and ensure follow up. Exhibit 1 of this report provides an overall list of program participants.

B. Non-Degree Judicial Educational Program

In March, 2002 Temple formed a partnership with the National Judicial Training College of the Supreme People's Court to operate a non-degree judicial education program. This program is operated in cooperation with New York University School of Law and Brigham Young University. The program consists of three months of Legal English education, taught by our partner, Brigham Young University, at the National Judicial College of the Supreme People's Court, followed by a concentrated four-week program in the United States. As part of the U.S. component, participants attend a three-week summer session on the role of the judiciary in a legal system governed by the Rule of Law at New York University's Institute for Judicial Training, and then they spend one week in Washington, D.C. meeting with their American judicial colleagues, the Department of Justice, and other legal institutions.

To date, 117 highly placed judges have attended this program, which were held in the spring of 2002, 2003, and 2004. The next program is expected to begin in February 2005. Participants are from geographically diverse parts of China, including many judges from the Western regions. Some judges have shown so much promise that we selected them to attend our LL.M. programs.

One of the participants is Ms. Lin Yidan, an Associate Judge of the Kunming Intermediate People's Court in Yunnan province. We have stayed in contact with her, and she has recently expressed the value of the Judicial Education Program. Her unedited comments follow:

I have considered thoroughly what I thought about this program. And I will write it from three aspects: What I have got from this program? What was this program effect on our courts and us? What is my recommendation to the program?

In the first place, I think most of us who attended this program had a chance to contact American law education pattern for the first time through it. The pattern has quite different from that of Chinese law school what we had received in University. Since the case law system pays more attention on precedent and procedure, this training showed me the essentiality to master the means and ways to learn and think than only know some law theory and regulation for a juristical career. It also let me reconsider the importance of cases. We ever emphasized on regulations of law when we adjudge a case. With the help of cases having been considered into judgments, my ability to applying law is better than ever. The courses of common and legal English raised my English language ability and I can read original legal text easier. The first-hand information makes me understand writers meaning more exactly. And the language training also let us get ready for degree learning or short-term training in U.S. The course of Internet research provided me some useful law sites which I did not ever familiar with even I knew well about computer and Internet. Last but not least, the lecture given by guest speaker was much helpful for me. Maybe it is the most popular part for all of us.

Secondly, I think everyone who attended the program undoubtedly affected by this training. Not many Chinese judges knew Temple University School of Law before. But now at least those courts that had sent judges to attend Temple program all acquainted with the program and Temple law school. As I know, every judge of our first course has written report to his/her court after he/she finished the program and returned. Some reports were published in the local or inner media. A few judges wrote research papers about some suggestion about the reform of Chinese judiciary system which published in a famous law journal in China. I think it is also with the help of the program.

Finally, I also want to talk something what I felt about the program. Though we four members met you in Beijing all thought the training time was limited, the possibility to prolong term is little. To arrange courses more efficient is probably better. I think some courses objectives were not definitely. For example, it is not suit for one who doesn't know law taught us legal English. Sometimes, we gained little in one course if the professor had not exactly didactical aim. I'd like to talk two recommendations about this program. One is expand applicant to the lower court. Because the first trails of a majority of cases are in these court. The affection of the program does not only lie on higher court, but I also need the participant of the lower courts. The means or procedure of selection had better tell everyone at the very start in order to avoid dispute. And I don't think is a good way to eliminate five member in every course. For each attends the language training doesn't slack off because of no elimination.

After a diplomatic difference of opinion with the United States over the suspension of elections in Hong Kong in 2004, the Chinese Ministry of Foreign Affairs temporarily suspended all rule-of-law training programs in the United States in early May 2004. Unfortunately, the timing of the suspension caused us to cancel the four-week U.S. summer component of this program originally scheduled to commence June 2004. We have been told by the Supreme People's Court that the 2005 session will likely go forward, and we are making plans accordingly.

Although we were very disappointed at this cancellation of the U.S. component of our program, we are gratified that the 39 judges in the 2004 session successfully completed the prior three months of education at the National Judicial College—even though this three-month session ended after the ban was enacted. Moreover, the fact that the ban did not interfere with the judges, prosecutors, and public officials who attended our LL.M. program in Philadelphia this past summer demonstrates that Temple's programs are given special consideration in China.

Please refer to Exhibit 2 for specific identifying information of the judges in the various Temple programs.

C. Non-degree Prosecutorial Educational Program

In 2002 the Supreme People's Procuratorate invited Temple to create a prosecutor non-degree legal education program modeled on our successful partnership with the Supreme People's Court. The first prosecutor education program ran from September to December, 2003. This initiative was carried out in conjunction with our partners at the Supreme People's Procuratorate and the Guangdong Procurator Training College.

Thirty-nine Chinese prosecutors attended an intensive three-month legal English

This program is an important vehicle for exposing prosecutors who are in a position to make policy and reform the Chinese system to the standards of criminal justice utilized in the United States. We expect this program to be an ongoing feature of Temple's rule of law efforts in China. In their written evaluation of the program, the participants were overwhelmingly positive about the program, with 70% reporting that the balance between theory and practice was ideal. A detailed evaluation was submitted in our quarterly report filed on January 30, 2004.

We are already seeing results from this program. Mr. Bian Fei, the Section Chief of the Anti-Corruption Group of the Nanshen District of the People's Prosecution Service of Shenzhen, presented a seminar to 100 of his colleagues upon his return to China. As a result of the information he presented, he has been requested to do a plan to reorganize the prosecutor's office based on the model of the U.S. Attorney's offices he visited as part of our program.

Exhibit 4 lists the prosecutors who attended the 2003 prosecutor non-degree legal education program, indicating their names, titles, and work units. All prosecutors were from Guangdong Province.<sup>5</sup>

GOAL II: Minority Outreach

To continue to seek out and educate Chinese minority (non-Han) legal professionals who have the potential to provide leadership for the advancement of those disadvantaged groups in China.

Temple is committed to identifying and supporting minority students in our LL.M. programs, and we aggressively recruit qualified minority students, particularly from the Western regions of China.

Qualified minorities with a law degree and English language skills are rare. To date, 26 Chinese minorities have either graduated from or are currently attending our LL.M. program, and two Tibetan lawyers are currently attending intensive English language classes. Twelve of the 26 ethnic minority students (46%) are currently working in the public sector. Four are judges, two are prosecutors, and one works at the Chinese State Council. Five graduates are law professors, currently posted at the laws schools of Central University for Nationalities, Zhengzhou University, and Sichuan University.

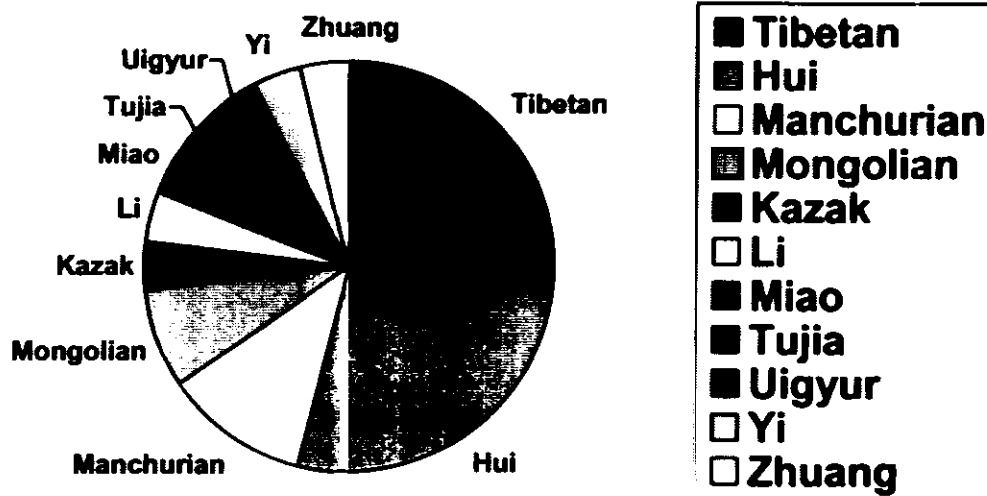

Overall, the LL.M. program has educated seven Tibetans, seven Hui, three Manchurian, two Mongolian, and one each Kazak, Li, Miao, Tjia, Uigyr, Yi, and Zhuang. Two Tibetans are currently studying legal English to prepare them for future legal studies. Please see Chart 5 below.

Overall Minority Participation in Temple Programs

Please see Exhibit 5 for a list of minority graduates, including their ethnicity and current professional affiliations.

We are optimistic about the future of our minority graduates, who we believe will make a contribution to their communities. Ms. Luo Xia is a Tibetan judge currently serving on the Qinghai provincial high court, with focus on intellectual property. She has a keen sense of promoting justice for Tibetans and expects that her international legal perspective will help her promote the rule of law in Tibetan regions of China. She is one of the few Tibetan judges with an international legal education.

In addition, many of the government officials who attend our LL.M. and non-degree legal education programs are minorities. We have also trained officials who are not themselves minorities, but work in areas where there are heavy concentrations of minority groups, thereby contributing to the fair treatment of minorities.

Chart 6 below highlights the geographic location of LL.M. graduates who currently work in minority regions of China.

GOAL III: Rule of Law Implementation

Providing input and advice to Chinese legislators, regulators, scholars, and judges as they develop China's legal infrastructure and institutionalize the rule of law.

The principal concept underlying this goal is to provide input and advice to Chinese legislators, regulators, scholars, and judges as they develop China's legal infrastructure and institutionalize the rule of law. By definition, this involves an open and collaborative process with Chinese decision makers. Temple has developed a strong network of contacts and a great deal of credibility with legal actors in China, creating many opportunities to engage in productive and effective collaborative work with Chinese legal experts.

Temple has, at the request of the Chinese Drafting Committees, hosted two major conferences to comment on drafts of Chinese Property and Tort laws. Temple has also hosted three major academic roundtables in the critical areas of WTO law, Internet regulation, and environmental law in China, each of which has resulted in numerous publications and fostered the intellectual development of Chinese legal experts who are continuing to contribute to legal development from within China. Temple has also been carrying out an AIDS and Health Care Regulation project that in itself has been source of four conferences and one major curriculum development workshop for law, public health, and medical schools.

A more specific description of these various projects follows below:

A. Law Drafting Conferences

Sino-American Forum on Chinese Property Law: June 17-18, 2002

In an extraordinary meeting held in Beijing, Professor Jiang Ping and the other four chief drafters of the new Chinese Property Law Code sought the comments and advice of a carefully selected group of U.S. legal scholars on the provisions of their proposed law. Topics discussed included the acquisition of private property ownership under China's evolving economic system, the protection of private property rights, and the relationship between property rights and the right enter into contracts.

This meeting was organized by Temple Professor Zhang Mo. The elite group of 23 participants included Chinese law professors, two members of the Chinese Academy of Social Science, a member of the NPC Legal Committee of Studies, fourteen American professors representing eight American law schools, and two legal practitioners. Interest was so high that the approximately 100 observation seats were filled to capacity each day by interested students. USAID was prominently listed on all banners as the conference's financial supporter.

By all accounts, the meeting was an unusually stimulating and open meeting which produced useful comments for the drafters of the new code and thought-provoking material. A detailed report is included in the Third Quarterly Report filed with USAID on July 30, 2002.

The papers from this conference are published in Chinese in a book which is available in China (ISBN 7-302-06957-3). The draft property law is expected to be enacted into law shortly. Mr. Shi Hong, one of our LL.M. graduates who works for the legislative drafting section of the National People's Congress, reported that he used this book when drafting the Eminent Domain sections of the Chinese Property Law.

Chinese Tort Law Conference: October 20-21, 2003

At the request of the National People's Legislative Affairs Office and Professor Jiang Ping, Temple was invited to host a conference to provide comments on the proposed tort law. Temple Professors Phoebe Haddon, Frank McClellan, Mark Rahdert, and William Woodward along with University of Pennsylvania Law School Professor Jacques de Lisle, traveled to Beijing to present papers on theories of U.S. tort law and to discuss the draft law. Professor Wang Liming of Renmin University, Wang Weiguo of China University of Political Science and Law, and Mr. Wang Shengming, Director of the Civil Law Division of the Legislative Affairs Office of the NPC, also participated. The papers from this conference resulted in the publication of a book in Chinese (ISBN 7-80078-875-X/D.764). USAID's support is noted in the book.

B. Scholarly Roundtables

WTO Roundtable: July 9-August 9, 2002

To support the development of legal scholarship on legal issues relating to China's entry into the WTO, five leading Chinese academics, a judge from the Supreme People's Court, the Director of WTO Legal Affairs at China's Ministry of Foreign Trade and Economic Cooperation, and a leading practitioner (and former diplomat) were in residence at Temple law school in Philadelphia for approximately one month during the summer of 2002. The Chinese scholars engaged in an intensive study of WTO-related legal issues. To assist in this process, they were provided offices, full access to the law school and university libraries, training on electronic databases (including Lexis and Westlaw), access to law school computers, and on-campus housing.

In addition to providing an opportunity to engage in sustained research on WTO-related issues, Temple organized a number of activities for the scholars, such as a series of briefings in Washington, D.C. for the Chinese scholars. The Chinese scholars had in-depth discussions with senior staff from the Congressional Executive Commission on China; with businesspeople engaged in international trade at the U.S.-China Business Council; and with attorneys from the Office of the U.S. Trade Representative and the Commerce Department's Office of Chief Counsel for International Commerce with responsibility for U.S.-China trade issues.

The scholars also participated in a lively series of "brown bag" lunch seminars presented by faculty from Temple and other law schools focused on WTO law, electronic commerce, the nature of legal reasoning, current developments at the U.S. Supreme Court, the relationships of domestic and international law, and judicial review.

The scholars' visit culminated in a two-day roundtable session where they presented their research-in-progress to a number of U.S.-based experts on WTO law. These experts brought a wealth of experience and perspectives from the academy, the private sector, international organizations, think tanks, and local governments to these discussions. Dr. Sylvia Ostry, Distinguished Research Fellow at the Centre for International Studies at the University of Toronto, and formerly Canada's Deputy Minister of International Trade and Ambassador for Multilateral Trade Negotiations, presented a lunch-time address at this Roundtable session.

Five of the Chinese participants and three others produced articles which can be found at 17 Temple International & Comparative Law Journal vol. 1 (Spring 2003). The WTO roundtable agenda and curriculum vitae of the Chinese scholars and roundtable attendees can be found on the web site of Temple's Institute for International Law and Public Policy at www.iilpp.org.

U.S.-China Internet Law Roundtable: July 2-30, 2003

In 2002 Temple Professor Amelia Boss began developing a working group to examine the many issues facing China as it struggles with the challenges of attempting to regulate the Internet and E-commerce. Professor Gao Fuping of East China University of Political Science and Law is one of China's leading scholars on E-commerce and was in residence at Temple in Philadelphia during academic year 2002-3 to collaborate with Professor Boss.

The advent of the Internet has forced the Chinese government to confront a host of new questions about how to regulate this potent commercial and information dispersal tool. Its decisions will have profound implications in such areas as commerce, freedom of speech, and human rights. To increase mutual understanding on important emerging issues in Internet law, Temple invited seven carefully selected Chinese scholars to participate in an intensive five-week period of dialogue with American and other academics, government officials, and practitioners. At the conclusion of the program Temple hosted a two-day roundtable seminar where the Chinese scholars presented their research to a group of leading North American experts on Internet law and electronic commerce.

The participants researched and spoke on many cutting-edge issues in Chinese Internet law. Tsinghua vice dean Wang Zhenmin gave a presentation on freedom of expression on the Internet; Justice Jiang Zhipai of the Supreme People's Court spoke on the Chinese approach to electronic commerce legislation, and China University of Political Science and Law professor Shi Xiaoli spoke about the treatment of electronic commerce under international conventions. A complete listing of papers presented at the Internet roundtable is located on the Institute's web site, www.iilpp.org.

The scholarship resulting from the Internet roundtable was published in 18 Temple International & Comparative Law Journal, vol. 1 (Spring 2004) and electronically as part of Temple's White Paper series. Many of these articles will also be published in Chinese journals.

It is expected that the Chinese faculty who attended the Internet roundtable will use their research to develop courses on the law and regulation of the Internet which they will teach at Chinese law schools. Professor Boss will be returning to China to work with the Chinese experts who attended the Roundtable to host a conference on the Law and Regulation of the Internet during the spring of 2005.

International and Comparative Environmental Law and Policy Roundtable: July 6-30, 2004

Nine Chinese representatives identified as key agents of environmental law and policy development and implementation in China spent a month researching and deliberating at the Temple campus, culminating in a comprehensive exchange of work and reactions with prominent U.S. specialists in domestic and international environmental law issues.

The proceedings are expected to be published in a leading journal such as the Temple International and Comparative Law Journal or the Temple Journal of Science, Technology and Environmental Law.

During the course of the roundtable, the Institute facilitated interactions between the Chinese leaders and scholars and appropriate governmental, NGO, and private sector institutions, including high-level visits in Washington, D.C. Key resource people were also invited to Temple to meet and interact with the visitors.

Visiting Professor of Law Marcia E. Mulkey, who is a long-time senior executive with the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency and a nationally and internationally recognized leader in the field, as well as Professor Jeffrey Dunoff, a prominent international environmental law scholar, provided the leadership for the roundtable. Highly regarded U.S. national experts provided lectures, making a rich environment for the Chinese participants. It is expected that these interactions will build lasting and enriching relationships that sustain long beyond the conclusion of the roundtable.

The Chinese visitors who came to the United States to participate in the roundtable were:

Chang Jiwen, Associate Professor of Law, National Institute of Law, Chinese Academy of Social Science,

Han Min, Deputy Division Director, Department of Policy and Legislation, State Environmental Protection Administration,

Ke Jian, Associate Professor of Law, Research Institute of Environmental Law, Wuhan University,

Li Zhiping, Associate Professor of Law, Law School of Zhongshan University,

Mao Baoping, Judge, Division for Cases of Administrative Matters, Supreme People's Court,

Na Li, Professor of Law, Jilin University School of Law,

Wang Mingyuan, Associate Professor of Law, Tsinghua University School of Law,

Wu Changhua, Executive Director, Green Development Institute; President & Co-Founder of Professional Association for China's Environment, and

Xu Kezhu, Associate Professor of Law, Civil and Commercial and Economic Law School at China University of Political Science & Law; Deputy Director, Center for Legal Assistance to Pollution Victims

C. Other Collaborative Projects

AIDS and Chinese Health Care Regulation Project

At the present time there is essentially no effective system in place to stem the dissemination of AIDS in China, which poses a serious health risk to China and to the rest of the world. In 2003, Temple Professor Scott Burris, a leading expert in AIDS and the law, formed the China Health Law Working Group to develop the expertise China will need to address its significant health care and regulation issues. Burris' work addresses such human rights concerns such as the right to an uncontaminated blood supply, AIDS education and treatment outreach, and the creation of laws and regulations that promote AIDS detection and treatment as well as prevent its dissemination.

Professor Burris conducted a survey, published as "Health Law Teaching and Research in Chinese Law Schools: Results of a Pre-SARS Survey" whose co-authors include one of our Beijing LL.M. graduates, Wang Zhengzhi, who is interested in developing an academic career in this area of law. The article can be found at 18 Temple International & Comparative Law Journal Vol. 1 (2004). The article documents that there is no significant education in health care regulation offered at Chinese schools of law, medicine, or public health.

To address the need to create Chinese experts, Professor Burris designed a series of five educational programs and conferences and has participated in two other conferences organized by Chinese experts. Descriptions of the two conferences hosted by Temple are listed below. Temple is also involved in organizing three other conferences: The Kunming Sino-American Conference on Health Law (December 2004); The Shanghai HIV/AIDS Law Conference co-hosted with the Shanghai Academy of Social Sciences (December 2004); and a Bioethics Conference at China University of Political Science and Law (Spring 2005). In addition, Temple will participate in two other conferences, the Tsinghua Symposium on the Development Tendency and Legal Education of Health Law in China (December 2004) and a Conference on HIV and Human Rights organized by Chinese AIDS activist, Dr. Wan Yanhai (December 2004).

Public Health and Governance Conference: March 24- 25, 2004

The Institute for International Law and Public Policy at Temple law school hosted a small, invitation-only meeting on public health and global governance.

The meeting brought together leading thinkers and doers for an high-level dialogue on the challenges that emerging threats including AIDS, SARS, and other international health issues pose to global governance (and to new theories of global governance). An outstanding collection of leading public health scholars, international law experts, and scholars of global governance participated in the meeting.

Participants included leaders in the field such as: Carleton University Professor Obijiofor Aginam, a lawyer and political scientist who specializes in the global governance of infectious diseases and international health law; Judith Auerbach, Vice President for Public Policy at the American Foundation for AIDS Research; Dr. Ronald Bayer of the Columbia University School of Public Health; His Excellency Hans Corell, Under Secretary for Legal Affairs and Legal Counsel, United Nations; Joanne Csete, Director of HIV/AIDS Program at Human Rights Watch; China expert Professor Jacques de Lisle, from the University of Pennsylvania School of Law; Mandeep Dhaliwal, Director of the International HIV/AIDS Alliance; Professor David Fidler, Oxford University, a leading scholar on international public health law and author of International Law and Infectious Diseases; public health specialist Professor Larry Gostin, of Georgetown and Johns Hopkins Universities; Professor Sophia Gruskin, of the Harvard School of Public Health; Professor Larry Helfer, a LAPA Fellow at Princeton University who specializes in intellectual property and human rights issues; Gene Matthews, former General Counsel of the CDC; Tony Moulton, of the CDC; Professor David Post, of Temple Law School, a leading expert on networks; Professor Mark A. Rothstein, Director of the Institute for Bioethics, Health Policy and Law at the University of Louisville; Jason Sapsin, Department of Health Policy & Management, Johns Hopkins University; Joanne Scott, Cambridge University, an expert in international trade law and EU law; Professor Susan Sell, of George Washington University, author of Private Power, Public Law: The Globalization of Intellectual Property Rights; Professor Edward Swaine, of the Wharton School, an international law expert; and Professor Peter Spiro, of Hofstra Law School, who focuses on immigration law issues and the role of non-state actors in international relations.

Chinese Public Health Law Curriculum Development Workshop: July 6-30, 2004

Temple's Chinese Health Law Workshop, designed to promote the development of the field of health law in China, brought Chinese legal scholars and government officers together with prominent U.S. health law academics. Over the course of the four-week program, participants attended three to five seminars per week and developed teaching curricula, research projects, and work plans for their return to China during the coming academic year. The workshop culminated in a two-day visit to Washington, D.C. to meet attorneys, government officials, and interest groups actively involved in health law and policy as well as two days of intensive working sessions devoted to presenting, critiquing, and refining the participants' projects and plans.

A total of eleven participants (seven men, four women) from eight academic institutions (China University of Political Science and Law, Sun Yatsen University, Jilin University, Tsinghua University, Zhejiang University, Sichuan University, Yunnan University, and Beijing University) and two government agencies (People's Congress of Shanghai, Ministry of Commerce of China) came to Temple for the month of July. The average age was 35, and participants held ranks from "Lecturer" to "Professor" (academic) and "Officer" (governmental).

Professor Burris and Jason Sapsin (Assistant Scientist, Johns Hopkins University) directed the Workshop. Ten guest faculty were recruited from seven U.S. academic institutions (University of Michigan, Rutgers, University of North Carolina, Johns Hopkins University, Brooklyn Law School, Georgetown University, Wake Forest University and Northeastern Law School). Their topics included U.S. Health Law, Health Policy and Politics, Disability Law, HIV/AIDS and the Law, Public Health Law, Bioethics, and Injury Control.

The participants left Philadelphia with a variety of approaches to advance the field of health law in China. Several participants plan to offer health law related courses in their home institutions. One participant, Professor Yu Haiyong of Zhongshan (Sun Yatsen) University in Guangzhou plans to open a health law legal clinic in which his students represent victims of medical malpractice. Others have programs to advance their research or legislative drafting projects. The entire team is collaborating to organize national and regional conferences in China on health law and related topics and to write, edit, and publish the seminal Chinese text on Health Law in the coming year.

Participants were asked at the close of the workshop to submit confidential evaluations of the program. They were asked to provide ratings across the four broad categories of Program Administration (8 questions), Program Academics (8 questions), Guest Faculty (11 questions), and Special Events (11 questions). Ratings were given on a continuous scale from 1 (low) to 5 (high). Scores clustered predominantly in the 4-5 range (indicating high to greatest satisfaction) across all 4 categories; in only one instance did the Program receive a rating below 3 in any of the 4 categories (Program Administration: Housing).

D. Lectures and the Temple Rule of Law Seminar Series

In addition to the above activities, many Temple faculty have given lectures in China or written paper or articles on their work in China. Please see Exhibit 6 for a list of all publications by Temple and affiliated faculty generated from the activities herein.

In addition to the conferences and workshops described above, members of the Temple and affiliated faculty have delivered over 30 lectures in China. Please see Exhibit 7 for a list of lectures and presentations.

During the first year of this project, Temple faculty delivered lectures on U.S. law to approximately 500 judges through the National Judicial College. In October, 2003, Ira Belkin, the Rule of Law Officer at the U.S. Embassy in Beijing, suggested that Temple create the Temple Rule of Law Seminar Series in Beijing to promote discussion among the Chinese and international legal community. The Temple Rule of Law Seminar Series offered its first lectures in March, 2004 and will be the primary vehicle under which Temple lectures are offered in the future.

Some examples of lectures delivered are listed below:

Professors Laura Little, Richard Barrett, and Louis Natali participated in a seminar on The Media and Defendants' Rights which was held at Tsinghua University on March 23, 2004. This was attended by members of the media from Beijing, the defense bar, and various media scholars. Professor Laura Little, U.S. Attorney and Associate Professor Richard Barrett, and prominent New York intellectual property lawyer and Adjunct Professor Martin Garbus also participated. Approximately 200 people attended.

Professor Barrett, who is an accomplished U.S. Attorney, also lectured to two groups of Chinese prosecutors on Official Corruption and Organized Crime, one in Beijing and one in Shanghai. The March 25, 2004, Shanghai program, organized by Xu Lan, the Shanghai Consulate's Rule of Law Coordinator.

In March 2004, Professor Natali presented two programs to a joint meeting of Hunan University and the Hunan Judges annual conference in conjunction with Ira Belkin. One was a mock case to demonstrate how a Motion to Suppress a Confession would be litigated in the United States.

In March 2004, Ira Belkin, Visiting Professor and Philadelphia Public Defender Flo Messier, and Professor Natali also held a panel discussion on various aspects of the U.S. Constitution and Criminal Procedure. Both events were attended by a standing-room only audience of students, faculty, and members of the judiciary.

In April 2004, Professor Natali and Ira Belkin presented the Motion to Suppress Evidence seminar to the National Prosecutor's College in Beijing. The audience consisted of prosecutors from all over China who were training at the National College.

Prior to the formation of the Temple Rule of Law Seminar Series, a number of other Temple faculty have been invited to lecture in China. A partial list follows:

On December 9-10, 2001, 91 Chinese judges attended a seminar on WTO Overview and Compliance Issues taught by Temple's Professor Jeffrey Dunoff.

On May 19, 2002, Temple Professor David Kairys, a well-known Constitutional law scholar, was invited to participate in a conference sponsored by Tsinghua University on the application and interpretation of law. He presented a talk entitled History and Current Reality of Freedom of Speech, involving the state of freedom of speech in the United States. In his report he states that there was significant interchange between Chinese and U.S. scholars on the role and operation of law, the rule of law, and the freedom of speech.

On June 9, 2002, Dean Robert J. Reinstein delivered a lecture to and facilitated a discussion among 220 judges at the National Judicial College in Beijing on Judicial Review of Legislation and Administrative Agency Action.

On July 1-2, 2002, Professor Eleanor Myers taught a seminar on Judicial Ethics to 200 Chinese judges at the National Judicial College in Beijing. At the request of the National Judicial College she wrote an article, Overview of the American Bar Association Model Code of Judicial Conduct which will be translated into Chinese and published in China. USAID support was noted.

Dean Robert J. Reinstein and Professor Mark Rahdert have prepared an article on the history of judicial review in the United States and lessons that can be drawn in China. They plan to publish this article shortly, with a Chinese version focusing on the importance of judicial independence to be published separately in China.

GOAL IV: WTO Obligations

Assisting Chinese government officials and legal professionals in meeting obligations imposed on China as it assumes membership in the WTO.

Over the three years of the project, Temple has offered a number of programs which focused on the WTO and China's related compliance obligations. They are as follows:

WTO Roundtable: July 9 - August 9, 2002

As detailed above, five leading Chinese academics, a judge from the Supreme People's Court, the Director of WTO Legal Affairs at China's Ministry of Foreign Trade and Economic Cooperation, and a leading practitioner (and former diplomat) were in residence at Temple law school in Philadelphia for approximately one month during the summer of 2002. The Chinese scholars engaged in an intensive study of WTO-related legal issues, published a series of articles which in 17 Temple International & Comparative Law Journal Vol. 1 (Spring 2003) and created a law school course on WTO law, which was taught at Tsinghua University School of Law.

Non-degree Judicial Training Program: July 23-August 18, 2002

Twenty-five Chinese judges attended a three-week classroom program at New York University School of Law's Institute of Judicial Administration followed by a one-week study tour of Washington, D.C. The classroom program covered the fundamentals of the U.S. legal system and the basics of common law methodology with a focus on WTO law. Classes were taught by Professor Jerome Cohen, an expert in Chinese law, and Professors H.H. Weiler and Jeffrey Dunoff, both experts in WTO law. It included an introduction to computerized legal research, a full service U.S. law library, and visits to the Court of International Trade, New York Civil Court, and a major law firm.

Temple LL.M. Degree Summer Session: June-July, 2004

To build upon activities in our prior reports, approximately one-half of the Temple LL.M. students in the United States for the summer session attended a one-day session at the Department of Commerce in Washington, D.C. on June 17, 2004. The students discussed trade issues, WTO compliance, and commercial law. All of the students attended a session at the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office on the following day which discussed the expectations of the international community regarding the protection of intellectual property rights.

GOAL V: Legal Education Reform

Supporting and collaborating with promising Chinese academics and law professors while in China and in residence at U.S. law schools.

One of the key features of Temple's work in China is its collaborative nature—every project involves U.S. and Chinese experts working together. Nowhere is this more apparent than in the results of the three roundtables on WTO Law, Regulation of the Internet, and the Environmental Law and Policy as well as the Health Law Curriculum Development Workshop, all of which are described in detail under Goal III above. Each of these initiatives has provided opportunities for Chinese scholars to interact with their Chinese and international peers. These scholars have continued to maintain contact with Temple law school and have been exchanging scholarly ideas and recommending to their Chinese peers that they apply to visit Temple.

The results of these collaborations have resulted in the newly-minted Chinese experts using the ideas explored during their time in Philadelphia to develop their own expertise in articles and books published in the United States and China, and in conferences with their Chinese colleagues.

The Temple LL.M. program has conscientiously sought out Chinese law professors to attend the LL.M. program precisely because professors are ideally placed to disseminate information to the future generation of lawyers who attend their classes. Fifteen law professors have attended or are currently attending Temple's LL.M. programs. We hear from professors who have graduated from our programs that they are using the methods and content and procedure learned in their LL.M. classes to teach their own students.

We are also training Chinese law professors to teach in Temple's LL.M. program in China. This year Professor Betty Ho is teaching Introduction to the Common Law Legal System to our LL.M. students in Beijing. This is significant because through collaboration she will incorporate the U.S. teaching styles that emphasize critical thinking and not rote memorization into her Chinese law school classes, thereby improving the quality of Chinese legal education.

Some of our Chinese LL.M. graduates are also creating text books to use in China. Professors Sha Lijin and Liu Yanping used their legal education to write two widely used Legal English text books. They are currently actively involved in a project which is translating U.S. law books into Chinese. The faculty members who attended the Health Law Curriculum Development Workshop this summer plan to collaborate to write the first textbook on Chinese Health Law and Regulation, making it possible for this course to be taught in Chinese law schools.

In addition, over the past three years, Temple has hosted the following Chinese legal scholars in Philadelphia for a semester or longer:

Professor Gao Fuping (2002-3), East China Univ. of Political Science and Law
Mr. Jin Jianmin (2001-2), Ministry of Personnel Resources
Professor Sha Lijin (Fall 2003), China Univ. of Political Science and Law
Doctor Wan Yanhai (Fall 2004), Director of AIDS activist NGO, Aizhi

III. PROGRAM EVALUATION

We evaluate the various programs that comprise the Temple Rule of Law Projects in China using a variety of methods. Every three months during the project we have filed detailed reports with the State Department and USAID describing the progress made in the program and evaluating the contributions made toward the long-term goal of advancing the rule of law in China. Our data collection methodology includes the following:

A. Self-Reporting Written Evaluations

We ask each student or participant in every program to complete a written evaluation form upon the completion of each course in the LL.M. program and every non-degree educational program. Copies of these program evaluations have been included in each quarterly USAID report following the conclusion of each course or program. In our program assessment questionnaires we request each student to provide an overall assessment of various aspects of the program, as well as whether the program has had a direct impact on their work, their career, their aspirations, and their view of Chinese law.

B. Oral Interviews and Focus Groups

We have conducted focus groups of LL.M graduates who completed the LL.M. program. In June 2002 we sent a team of two law professors and one administrator to China to conduct personal interviews with approximately half of our graduates to assess the impact of the program on them and their legal careers. The results, which were very gratifying, have been compiled and were summarized in a report, which was submitted to USAID on January 31, 2003.

We recently compiled a list of our graduates showing their professional title when they entered the program along with their current title. We are particularly interested in our public sector employees, which comprise 62% of all our LL.M. students. We found that 100% of those who began in the private sector continue to serve the public and that 47% of them have been promoted to positions of greater responsibility since their graduation.

Please see Exhibit 8 for an updated sampling of 35 graduates who indicated a promotion or an upward career charge after graduating from an LL.M. program. Exhibit 8 does not include those who were students or otherwise unemployed prior to their Temple education, but rather those who came to Temple and were able to advance their pre-existing careers as a result. As these graduates continue to be placed higher in their institutions, their abilities to disseminate the U.S. legal principles they learned from Temple becomes more feasible.

C. Anecdotal Stories

Anecdotal evidence has its limitations, but it can also provide some insight into the impact of a program.

We have already conducted interviews with a substantial number of our graduates which show that their studies in the LL.M program are having an impact, as described above. We will continue to discuss the program informally with our students to collect their impressions on an ongoing basis.

Mr. Cui Daqi, a partner in the Beijing Jiahao law firm, was selected to participate in our LL.M. program because he is an active member of the criminal defense section of the Beijing Lawyers Association and maintains a criminal defense practice. Upon completion of his degree, he returned to his law firm to resume his practice. Mr. Cui has indicated that his Temple education has given him hands-on experience with the U.S. system and further enabled him to advance the needs of his clients. He said that his perspective of his role of a lawyer has changed, seeing a lawyer more as an advocate than simply a passive purveyor of information. This awareness will allow him to more effectively assist his clients involved in the criminal process in China.

Judge Li Quansuo, presiding judge of the High Court of the Inner Mongolia Autonomous Region, said that his participation in the judicial education program has proved invaluable to his career. As one of the few judges with international education, Judge Li indicated that he now wields disproportionate influence in his court, and his superiors often look to him for suggestions on how to carry out reform. His colleagues frequently ask him questions on legal, procedural, and administrative questions based on his knowledge of the U.S. model. Thus, the multiplier effect is both vertical (influencing superiors and assistants) and horizontal (influencing colleagues). Judge Li underscored that all judges from throughout China who participated in the Temple programs will likely enjoy such influence in their regional courts, and they will clearly be on an upward trajectory to wield great influence in the direction of the courts.

We continually receive feedback from our alumni, both formally at our annual alumni affairs in China, as well as informally through postal and electronic correspondence. We keep this data in our files and were able to produce some of the anecdotal stories in this report as a result of our practice of monitoring and following up with our alumni.

D. Statistical Evaluation

As our goal is to disseminate knowledge as widely as possible, we will consider the numbers of students who successfully complete our programs a measure of our success. For example, in this report we have provided statistics in each of the following categories:

Number of participants from each program	Exhibit 1
Number and level of judges participating	Exhibit 3
Number and level of prosecutors participating	Exhibit 3
Number and level of government officials participating	Exhibit 3
Number of law professors participating	Exhibit 3
Number of private practitioners participating	Chart 4
Number of minority (non-Han) lawyers participating	Exhibit 5
Number of graduates working in minority areas	Chart 6

IV. MATTERS RELATED TO THE COOPERATIVE AGREEMENT

Modifications

This Cooperative Agreement has been subject to three modifications, each of which was attached to the appropriate quarterly report.

Modification 1, effective July 12, 2002, changed the responsible administrative office to M/OP/EER/EESTA.

Modification 2, effective August 29, 2002, increased the total cost to $2,300,000 and extended the completion date to 9/1/03.

Modification 3, which appears to improperly numbered as Modification 4, effective August 29, 2003, increased the total cost to $7,030,500 and extended the completion date to 8/31/04.

On November 22, 2004, Contracting/Agreement Officer Marcelle Wijesinghe sent an Email granting an extension of time until December 12, 2004 to file the final report.

Cost Sharing

Under the terms of the Cooperative Agreement, Temple agreed to provide $418,116 in Cost Sharing, which Contracting Officer Carey Gordon informed Temple by e-mail dated October 30, 2004 can be spread throughout the three year term of the agreement. Temple has satisfied its Cost sharing obligation by contributing more than $493,783 to the subject projects over the term of the agreement.

Budget

The required financial documents are being provided with this report showing that all funds have been spent.

This Cooperative Agreement relates to the period from September 25, 2001 to August 31, 2004. It started as a one-year grant that was extended for two additional years using Modifications. The total amount is $7,030,500. Of this amount, the total direct costs came to $6,270,171.93, which is $86,908.08 under the budgeted direct costs. The indirect costs were over the budget by the same amount, $86,908.08.

This differential was caused by the fact that we did not spend the entire amount allocated for tuition scholarships. The total budgeted for tuition scholarships was $1,452,000, and we actually spent $1,147,133.68, which was $304,866 less than budgeted. As tuition scholarships are excluded from Temple's overhead base, reallocating the $304,866 to other direct costs which are included in the overhead base, increased the indirect costs by $79,265.16.

The reason we did not use all of the budgeted scholarships was that we were not able to identify as many qualified judges and government officials for the LL.M. program as we had projected. Although we were able to use the vast majority of the funding to sponsor public sector students to attend our LL.M. program, we were not as satisfied with the quality as we had expected when we submitted the original budget, and we did not want to use the funding on candidates who did not meet our standards.

However, all of the unspent tuition scholarship funding was spent on educational programs for Chinese officials described in the proposal. The funding was spent on summer academic roundtables and on the expenses related to the U.S. summer session for the LL.M. degree program.

As soon as the discrepancy was noticed, we submitted a request for approval to adjust our project budget by decreasing the total direct costs to $6,270,171.93 and increasing our indirect costs to $760,328.10. As the report is due on December 12, 2004, we are submitting the report before a decision has been made on the reallocation request.
